MEMORANDUM FOR: Director, Public Affairs

FROM: [REDACTED]

Coordinator for Academic Affairs

SUBJECT: Presentations and Public Appearances
during 1984

1. In response to your request for a brief summary of presentations and public appearances, [REDACTED] has reviewed the weekly calendars for 1984. There were over 1,300 such appearances reported by Agency officers during this period. The DCI made 29 appearances ranging from a speech at the Atlantic Council, to hosting a group of university presidents here at CIA, and speaking to a group from the Girls' Nation. The DDCI made eight appearances including a session with Colorado Business Leaders, a meeting of the American Astronautical Society, and, a speech to students at the Air War College.

2. Officers from the Academics and Presentations Staff (principally [REDACTED] were quite busy on the speakers circuit as well. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] spoke to many other government groups including classes from the National Security Agency and Defense Intelligence College, and other military commands, and provided briefings to congressional staff aides and others. In addition, we made presentations to students from 35 different colleges and universities and spoke at professional meetings such as the World Affairs Council and the International Studies Association.

3. There has also been a huge representational effort on the part of other components of the CIA. These have mostly come from the Directorate of Intelligence, but the Directorate of Science and Technology and the Directorate of Administration have contributed as well. There were even a couple of presentations from the Directorate of Operations. The presentations ranged from Mel Goodman of DDI/SOVA speaking at the Council on Foreign Relations, to [REDACTED] of OTE speaking on "Cultivating and Nourishing Talent" at the Center for Creative Leadership, and John Stein on "Understanding Federal Government Operations" at the Brookings Institution. There were many papers presented at academic conferences such as [redacted] at a Korean affairs seminar [redacted] In addition to the 220 presentations made by Agency officers, some 900 attended conferences and symposia.

4. The above data suggest that we indeed have an effective program for reaching out into the academic and professional world and that Agency officers by participating in these conferences and symposia and making public speeches are creating goodwill, creating a receptive climate and helping to educate people about the world of intelligence. The scope of this effort and the number of participants from diverse components also speaks to a continued need for an element within your office to track and coordinate these public appearances. With the revived campus ferment and protests against CIA representatives making public appearances we need to exercise some care that our officers are not blind sided when making one of these lectures. (The problems encountered by the recruiters are a different matter).
